HARDY FERNS

Hardy Ferns should be planted in the Fall to obtain best results. They should be given a light covering of leaves to prevent winter killing and care taken not to plant too deep. Those varieties with a crown, plant level with the surface, while those growing from underground root stalks, plant just below the surface. Ferns thrive in a light and porous soil with a goodly amount of leaf mold.

NATIVE WILD FLOWERS and ROCK PLANTS

Wild Flowers that grow from tubers or bulbs should preferably be planted in the autumn. Invariably they start their growth as soon as the frost leaves the ground in the spring and cannot be moved without some set-back. For all other wild flowers we recommend Spring planting.
